You Can Help Save Rural Internet Access

The FCC has proposed radical policy changes that could deprive millions of individuals, businesses, and governments of affordable, high-quality broadband Internet access. Rural broadband providers, like Diversicom have responded by putting forward alternative proposals that will make reform work for all consumers, including those who live in rural areas like you. That alternative is now before the FCC for review.

Visit www.saveruralbroadband.org to complete a pre-written letter you can send electronically to your senators, your representative, and the Obama administration. The future of Internet access for millions of rural Americans, like you, hangs in the balance. Please take action now and make your voice heard.
